

Employee of The Week

2017-09-01, the Friday before the long weekend, I got the Employee of The Week award in our company's monthly newsletter.

It was a surprise, since I never expected to get that award as a new hire, all the people are working very hard and making very big impact here. I was working, then colleagues came and said congratulations.

Maybe they really appreciate my extra effort in that New York demo, maybe it's a way to motivate new hires.

But it really makes me love what I am doing more! I love diving into the data to dig out insights that help decision making, knowledge building and opportunities exploration.

Now I'm still adding and finishing items on my after work to-do list.

I love the process of doing those experiments and keep learning new things. Love the feeling that during the day time, I am working on my beloved data science for the industry. After work, I am a data scientist who can explore everything I am interested in! Love the process of problem solving!

Life is great in this way! When you have short-term goals and a long-term goal there, all the challenges will finally turn into positive energy.

*Colleagues are amazing! Friends are also working very hard toward their goals. Being surrounded by them, it's very inspiring.
