PRIDE AND PREJUDICE

I have finished reading this classical book, and now multiple weeks uneasiness of hoping to finish the book earlier has ended. I love book.

Among all the 4 marriages appeared in the book, the most important 2 are still cinderella stories that many women love to read. To simplify what happened between Elizabeth and Darcy (namely, they are the prejudice and the “pride”), it’s about a young man who is super rich and has no parent, falling in love with a young lady who was not showing enough respect to him, but this young lady also has a beautiful look without fake civility nor fake beauty as many women that Darcy had seen. So, this is quite align with human nature. A young man like Darcy will definitely get so much women’s admiration. Therefore Elizabeth will appear to be very special.

Normally I won’t read this type of love story, because I rarely believe cinderella story is beautiful or could have a happy ending (instead, I firmly believe that women should depend on ourselves). But I like the way Jane Austin wrote the story, the detailed depiction in people’s emotion and characteristics raised my interest, feeling I could see what’s happening there while reading, and want to see more.

Every character's personality is so rich and was clearly shown in front of you. Not only the depiction on emotion, behavior, the way Jane Austin arranged the stories was amazing, not only to help you understand each character deeply, but also to help you observe how did Elizabeth fell in love with Darcy after the bias. While everything looked so natural along the way, your emotion will also be affected, to feel the happiness of Darcy's affection towards Elizabeth, to feel the sadness towards Darcy's about the first rejection and the hatred towards Wickham when more and more truth disclosed, also feel the sorrow that Elizabeth had when she heard her sister's disgraceful elopement with Wickham. At the end of the story, Jane Austin also generously described what happened to every character appeared in the book after all the marriages got settled.

I personally cannot appreciate Elizabeth that much, not because normally I don't like cinderella, but because of her personality. The way she disliked Darcy made me doubt her judgement. With the impression that Darcy is proud and she didn't like him, I really don't see any reason for her to always tried to embarrass him without really knowing this person. Although this triggered Darcy's love.... sad.

Instead, Darcy is my favorite character in the book. He can really observe people's personality and real intention. The moment he spoke out the reason that Miss Bingley invited Elizabeth to go to downstairs was just to show off her body shape made me feel funny, but also appreciate his observation.

There are so many men in this world, in anytime of the history are so blind from the truth. Therefore you can often see bitches married good men. Those bitches could have fake beauty or fake civility. They also share one common thing, they look like having many friends, almost all the people like them, but in fact you never know what do they think and what did they really do. I especially don't like those stupid men who will think these bitches are good friends or the best choices to get married with. So here, have to give Elizabeth credit for being a real good girl who deserves love and fortune, and it's just so pleasant to see there is a perfect man who is also smart enough. And the best part is, knowing Lydia's notorious elopement, Bingley and Darcy still love the 2 girls and being willing to unit with this family. At that time, in British, how much courage they should have. Even in modern time, it's tough, in other ways.
