

Girls4Tech 2019

Today, whole afternoon, I was interacting with little girls, helping them understand what is Fraud Detection.

Let me skip those details about technology, psychology, personality, etc. topics.

The moment that was most impressive to me was the end.

All the kids, parents and volunteers gathered in the kitchen, Sara was standing there, calling each girl's name to give them the certificates. Parents were smiling, taking photos, trying to record the moments. I found it was so touching and warmhearted to see those parents' smile. These parents play different roles in this society, but in front of their kids, they are the same, no difference at all.

And it reminds me of my mom. In my childhood, there were a few years, only mom and me. Mom was busy and often told me she may attend my events, if she got time. So I was always looking for her before the event. In fact she attended every time, and appeared in a place where I could find her, with the same smile I saw today. That smile always gave me the power and happiness.
