

I'd Rather Being Alone

I can sit there, reading a book or studying for a very long time. From childhood till now, this hasn't changed. Therefore, most of the time, I am alone.

It's been a very long time that I hope to have girlfriends, whom I can chat with in leisure time. However, again, I still haven't found that type of friends.

We had hotpot today. They also brought another girl here, and started to talk about salary when they were talking about choosing their future work. One of them wanted to try data science, then another one suddenly said "that has lower payment than developer...". I was listening, feeling sick of the food.

Without judging whether she was right. I simply don't like this type of conversation. Obviously, you don't know what do you really want, and you won't try to look for the answer, just like many other Chinese.

I'd Rather Being Alone

This is one of the major reasons that I tend to stay away from Chinese. They simply love sharing ideas to jump between companies in order to get higher salary, they can work hard even when they don't like the work. When they got old, they told younger people, which stable job to choose without thinking what do they really like. If you don't do what they suggested, they think you are stupid.

These Chinese girls are nice people, hard working. But, compared with them, I prefer a type of friendship with an India-Canadian girl. She is full of ambitious and started her own business before school graduation. Now, she is working day and night but her life is full of passion. We seldom talk since she is too busy, but we know the other one is there to feel happy for you when you are working hard toward your goals.

I prefer friends who are working on what they are passionate about, or at least trying their best to find where is their passion.

I'd Rather Being Alone

Maybe, this is my destiny. Being alone, or at least need to be alone for a very very long time.

Maybe, I should simply be myself. In my leisure, sit there, reading or studying, feeling peaceful.

Maybe, next friend, will be someone who can understand me, and have time to hang out with me...