C'est la Vie

I just answered all of my manager's questions, took me so much time to check developers' source code in order to get the answer. But this time, I have to appreciate his questions, at least he read everything I wrote there very carefully. Much better than last time, without reading what I wrote there, he started to make so much comments and I got so much emails.

People are improving, sometimes, we need to wait for a while and will realize that.

People could all get stressful in the workplace, in research area.

Everyone has something to complain about or many challenges to deal with.

Life never let you relax for a long time.

This week, just got professor's email, saying one of their papers cannot be published because the judges believe they should use kappa for analysis while my professor believes that's not accurate. Just 1 formula made the paper cannot be published…

Life, this is normal, this is life.